Ethics Workshop

The myriad demands that confront contemporary school psychologists are (a) constantly evolving, (b) increasingly complex, and (c) incredibly challenging! In an era of increasing accountability and the seeming necessity to “do more with less,” it becomes crucial to practice in a manner that acknowledges the importance of meeting the demands of multiple stakeholders who may frequently have dissimilar goals. A practical and humorous approach based on a series of real-life vignettes that have been encountered by school psychologists will be used to untangle conflicting demands and mandates. Using APA and NASP ethics codes, attendees will be asked to thoughtfully explore feasible problem-solving approaches to most effectively and efficiently determine optimal, pragmatic courses of action.

Presenter:

Dr. Joan Struzziero is a nationally certified school psychologist who has taught in school psychology training programs for more years than she is willing to admit! She is currently a practitioner at Scituate High School in Scituate, MA, is on the faculty of UMASS-Boston’s Counseling and School Psychology department, and teaches a doctoral-level course in supervision at William James College. She has served on ethics committees at the state and national levels for over twenty years. She has co-authored two books on supervision and has published and presented nationally and internationally.

Threat Assessment Workshop

This workshop is based on a presentation by Dr. McCabe, Ruth Crowell, and Karen Lacey-Martin to the Maine Principal’s Association a few years ago. Participants will receive a copy of the new book Comprehensive School Threat Assessment Guidelines by Dewey Cornell (2018), which provides a researched-based model endorsed by the National Association of School Psychologists that was designed to assist school personnel with predicting school violence. Key aspects of this model will be reviewed. It will be incumbent for the participants who are unfamiliar with the work to read and pursue further investigation of this systematic approach after the presentation.

Presenter:

Dr. Frank McCabe is a school psychologist in RSU #40, Union, Maine. He devoted the first half of his career working with significantly involved children and youth in public and private settings such as a maximum security correctional facility for youth, state institutions for children, and inpatient/residential treatment settings. He has developed residential treatment, experiential learning, and extreme wilderness-based programs for at-risk and behaviorally challenged youth. Dr. McCabe has presented nationally, written position papers, and testified in court regarding involuntary hospitalizations of violent youth. The second half of his career has been in public education where he developed day treatment programs. Dr. McCabe is a Past President of MASP and currently serves on the Executive Board.
